- Workshop participants will be able to list at least two questions to help ascertain an organization's cultural competence.

June 26, 2025 (3 Continuing Education Hours)

This course is NBCC approved for the biennial requirement of 3 clock hours of continuing education in the area of social and cultural competence. This is a requirement of many NJ licensing boards or committees, for example, professional counselors, social workers and substance use counselors (see how I did that alphabetically) receive 3 hours of biennial training in this area. Many other state's licensure or certification boards also have this requirement.

This workshop will have participants looking into various issues of counseling as it pertains to the work of a counselor/therapist. Cultural competence is a healthcare standard that was established decades ago and implemented, on some level, by the requirement of licensees/certificate holders to obtain continuing education in this area. Cultural humility was developed in 1998 to address this area in a lensing it felt "cultural competence" either didn't address. This workshop will blend both concepts and address how each is important in the work within the behavioral healthcare field.

The goal of this interactive workshop will discuss the concepts of cultural humility and cultural competence in the counseling profession. Workshop participants will be introduced into the differences between cultural competence and cultural humility. Participants will be able to differentiate between the two and be able to identify at least two problems association with the concept of cultural competence. Participants will learn about the origin of race as it is defined in the United States, and how our conceptions differ from other cultures. Workshop participants will be introduced to four different code of ethics, how they define our need to be culturally competent, and whether they even address cultural humility. Both large and small group exercises on cultural awareness will occur throughout this workshop.
